Wood Notifies Hoover & Sedgwick of Suit

By Stewart Lytle, Sr. Reporter

GEORGETOWN – Kevin Wood has notified former Select Board Chair Robert Hoover and Police Chief David Sedgwick of his intent to sue them personally for stopping him last spring from speaking to the Select Board and having him removed from the Town Hall meeting.

Wood previously notified the Select Board of his intent to sue the Town in August. However, a municipality cannot be sued until six months passes from the date of notification.

During the public comment period of the board's April 27th meeting, Wood was recognized to speak for three minutes. He wanted to address whether Town Administrator Orlando Pacheco had the authority, without the board's consent, to hire a law firm to give an opinion regarding the TA's firing of Conservation Agent Michele Grenier.

Kevin Wood reading his statement, April 27 , 2026

Pacheco hired the firm Murphy, Hesse, Toomey & Lehane, instead of KPLaw, the town's law firm, to render an opinion. That opinion was used months later by the TA when he abruptly terminated Grenier via email on a Friday morning when town hall was closed.

The conservation agent had been recorded – unknown to her at the time – while informing members of the conservation commission that a meeting was being postponed at the direction of the chair of the commission. At one point, she criticized Pacheco for not arranting for the Boxford's Larry Curtis Honored!

BOXFORD – WinnDevelopment Chair Larry Curtis was inducted into the Affordable Housing Hall of Fame last week, the third company executive and the first not named Winn, to receive this honor.

A Boxford resident, Curtis addressed the challenging issues today facing affordable housing finance and development. He told an industry conference sponsored by the Affordable Housing Magazine that building enough affordable housing to meet the demand will require new energy, new thinking and new approaches.

"Our legacy as leaders should not be a nostalgic look backward. It should be a passionate and urgent look forward to a future in which we mentor the young minds of our successors and give them a head start on their mission," he said.

WinnCompanies is an award-winning owner, developer and manager of apartment homes in 30 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico. In 1981, it built the Alice G. Winn Heritage House on Low Street in Newburyport.

High School Music Program Receives Awesome Georgetown Grant

by Alan Aulson

GEORGETOWN – "Pitch Night" for the November grants awards for Season 6 of Awesome Georgetown was held at Cafe Sarina (located at Nunan Florist and Greenhouses) last week.

Awesome Georgetown is a local chapter of the Awesome Foundation, a global "experiment in community philanthropy" committed to giving out up to $10,000 in grants throughout the calendar year. Georgetown's group of 20-25 Trustees gives "no strings attached" grants to applicants deemed to have the most awesome idea to enhance the Georgetown community in some positive way.

Community members Brooklyn Lynch-Godbout, Eliza Burton, and their teacher Amy Smith presented their creative vision to transform an unused Georgetown High School storage area into a band practice room, with a little star power joining via Zoom from a local musician Wade Turner - who also helped create the idea! Their pitch struck the right chord, earning them a $2,000 Awesome Georgetown grant to help turn their musical dream into reality.

Awesome Georgetown is also interested in supporting projects that fall into any of the following categories:

tural Council, the painted electric boxes are next to City Hall on Green Street, at 10 Market Square at Illume Book Store and on Low Street at Toppans Lane near the Nock/Molin schools.

The project had the support of the City Council and Mayor Sean Reardon, who called the utility box project an important endeavor that enhances "our public spaces with art for the enjoyment of all of Newburyport."

Public Art Committee Chair Mark Ferrandini said, "Emily did a wonderful job bringing that history to life on these three utility boxes. We're thrilled to bring this work into new parts of town for both residents and visitors to enjoy."

It fits with Newburyport's long history as "a creative, dynamic city, and we want to make sure that story is visible in neighborhoods," Ferrandini said.

Across Merrimack Valley downtowns and neighborhoods, notably in Lawrence and Haverhill, as well as Newburyport, vibrant murals are transforming walls and eyesores like utility boxes into bold expressions of history, community pride and artistic vision.

Jewett was the artist for a similar electric box mural project in Haverhill in 2025. She has completed more than 50 murals in 13 countries so far and has funded her travels solely through art exchanges – painting murals for hotels, restaurants, businesses and public spaces.

"Art has not only allowed me to see the world, but to connect with it in ways I never imagined. I believe every mural can transform a space and inspire those who encounter it," Jewett said.

installation of computer software that allowed employees to work from home during an ice storm last winter.

She said she was tempted to tell him to do his (explicative) job.

Pacheco stated in his termination e-mail to her that her comment was a reason for firing her, but later denied that was the cause.

Wood's lawsuit, which has been docketed, seeks a trial by jury and asks for "compensatory and punitive damages against Hoover and Sedgwick" for violations of the Massachusetts Civil Rights Act and the Massachusetts Constitution for unlawful seizure, assault, battery, false imprisonment and for negligent and/or intentional infliction of emotional distress and mental anguish.

It also seeks damages for violations of the United States Constitution.

Wood has also asked for a public apology for the incident, but none was made.

The suit would have the court enjoin Hoover and Sedgwick from "viewpoint-based interruption or removal of Wood during peaceable public comment during an allotted time limit."

In his comment during the Select Board meeting, Wood quoted Georgetown bylaw that states the Select Board "shall have full authority to employ (legal) counsel."

About a minute into his comments, Wood said: "If the board has full authority, that means you, Mr. Hoover, have zero. And it means Mr. Pacheco has screwed up royally and you're covering up for him, …"

Hoover interrupted Wood, shouting: "Let's not go there with that stuff. Let's not go there with that stuff."

Wood finished his sentence, saying, "at least until the election," referring to the May town election in which Hoover was running for reelection.

Asked why he hired the Murphy firm for the opinion, Pacheco told The Town Common by email that "Murphy, Hesse, Toomey, & Lehane LLP was hired on the basis of expertise and experience within the municipal community."

Wood's suit states: "Calling Sedgwick to eject a recognized speaker, mid-comment, for criticizing Hoover on an agenda item, during a televised town meeting, is extreme and outrageous. Hoover and Sedgwick intended or recklessly caused severe emotional distress and mental anguish."

Hoover and Sedgwick have 120 days from Nov. 7 to respond to the suit.

The Select Board held an executive session on this matter, but released no information.

When asked for a comment via e-mail, Wood explained:

"1. The Town Administrator employed a law firm in direct contradiction to a Town Bylaw reserving the right to the Selectboard.

2. He obtained an opinion from that law firm which directly contradicts another Town Bylaw giving the Selectboard authority to hire and fire employees. He then unilaterally terminated an employee based on that opinion.

3. The Town, without a vote of the Selectboard, has taken the position that opinion - which over-turns Town Bylaws that were created and approved by the citizens of Georgetown at Town Meetings where a quorum of voters participated - is secret and will not be disclosed due to "attorney client privilege".

The opinion is a defacto "secret" law. China & Russia have secret laws. There is not [sic] place for secret laws in the United States of America.

In furtherance of protecting the Town Administrator and this secret law, my First Amendment Rights were egregiously violated by then Selectboard Chair Hoover and the Chief of Police."

The Town Common has attempted and been denied access to view the contents of the secret opinion which the town administrator states gives him the right to hire and fire employees. He indeed moved forward and hired a new person to fill the head role for the town's cable access television. The Select Board approved his hiring of the individual, apparently after the person was hired.

Some have asked the paper if the job was posted, advertised, and if town residents were given an opportunity to interview for the position the town administrator, Pacheco, filled. We do not at this time know of any such opportunities given.

The former occupier of the cable TV position was hired by the Select Board.

One and only one member of the Select Board, Mike Donahue, repeatedly attempted to also get a copy of the secret opinion released to taxpayers. His requests have been repeatedly denied.

"I think the best part of Awesome Georgetown is it gives people the opportunity to give back to the people who want to do something great of Georgetown," Trustee Gina Thibeault shared. "If anyone in Georgetown has a great idea, we want to see them, because any way that we can make Georgetown better, is better for everybody here."

"It feels really special for me to be able to give back to our community in this way," Gina explained. "Pete Lucido and Mike Gilstein are good friends and they reached out to us to join the group. I just think it's a great opportunity to give back locally."

One of her favorite projects included supporting a group of ladies who bring items to Trestle Way - cleaning items, toilet paper, and decorating the items - delivering packages to each resident.

"There was another one where the kids from Georgetown came in looking for an outfit for their Knight guy for pep rallies. It was super cute," Gina said.

The Empty Chair at Thanksgiving

by Peter Preble

Every year, as Thanksgiving approaches, we begin gathering the familiar things that make the holiday feel like Thanksgiving. The serving dishes come out of the cupboards, recipes are pulled from drawers, and someone inevitably discovers that we don't have nearly enough room in the refrigerator.

Among the things that appear on our table are a set of ceramic turkey napkin holders. They aren't particularly valuable, and I doubt anyone would mistake them for fine art. But they have become one of my favorite Thanksgiving traditions.

They remind me of my mother.

Many years ago, we hosted Thanksgiving for the first time. There was the usual excitement and confusion of preparing a holiday meal, making sure everyone had a place at the table, and hoping the turkey would be ready before everyone lost patience. My mother was there, and although I remember that day fondly, there is something I could not have known at the time.

It would be her last Thanksgiving.

We rarely recognize those moments while we are living them. We assume there will be another holiday, another family gathering, another opportunity to sit together and tell the same stories we've heard a hundred times. We complain about preparing the meal, argue about how the potatoes should be made, and promise ourselves that next year we'll be better organized.

And then, one year, someone is missing.

The chair may be occupied by someone else, or the table arranged differently, but we notice the absence. We notice it in the conversations that no longer happen, the familiar voice that isn't there, and the traditions that suddenly feel different.

Holidays have a way of making grief more noticeable. During the rest of the year, we learn to live with the absence of people we love. We establish new routines and find ways to move forward. But holidays bring us back to familiar places, reminding us not only of who is gathered around the table, but also of those who once sat there.

Thanksgiving can be especially complicated because we are encouraged to focus on gratitude. We gather to give thanks for the blessings in our lives, and sometimes that expectation can make grief feel out of place. How can we be grateful when someone we love is missing?

But gratitude and grief are not opposites. In fact, they often exist together.

We grieve because someone mattered to us. We miss their presence because their life was woven into our own. The sadness we feel around the holiday table does not diminish our gratitude. Sometimes it is an expression of it.

Over the years, I have come to appreciate how ordinary objects can hold extraordinary memories. A familiar recipe or a story told for the hundredth time can remind us of someone who is no longer physically present. These things may seem insignificant to anyone outside the family, but to us, they carry something irreplaceable.

For me, it is those ceramic turkeys.

I don't bring them out because I want Thanksgiving to be sad or because I cannot accept that things have changed. I bring them out because they remind me of someone I love and of a day that became more important than I ever imagined it would be.

There will always be changes around our Thanksgiving tables. Children grow older, families expand, people move away, and some chairs become empty. We cannot preserve every gathering exactly as it was, nor should we try.

But we can make room for memory alongside celebration. We can speak the names of those who are missing, tell their stories, laugh about the things they used to say, and allow ourselves to feel whatever the day brings.

This Thanksgiving, those little ceramic turkeys will once again find their way onto our table. There will be food, conversation, probably a little chaos, and hopefully enough room in the refrigerator.

And somewhere amid it all, there will be a place for my mother, too.

It was the l 960's, a tumultuous time in the world. Hippies had captured the imagination of some espousing "love not war" as their anthem, while other young men and women were thrown into a living hell as evidenced on the evening news which for the first time brought war into the living rooms of ordinary families.

Some boys, young and eager for adventure, who also felt an obligation to serve their country, volunteered to participate in history. Dom Russo was one of those men, but he wasn't prepared for the roller coaster ride his life was about to take. The story captures the life of a young man leaving home for the first time, and then suddenly being confronted with the realities of armed combat.

Vietnam was the catalyst that turned boys into men and total strangers into brothers who were willing to do anything to protect each other and everything to defend our freedom.

It wasn't all bad though. Dom and his friends engineered and enjoyed some wild schemes interspersed between the nightly bombings and missions.

When Minutes Seemed Like Hours

Domenic Russo served in Vietnam as a member of the elite 101st Airborn Division, also know as the "Screaming Eagles." He received several awards including the Bronze Star and two Air Medals for action while participating in aerial flights in support of counterinsurgency operations in country. Dom has maintained relationships with those sho served with him during the character defining years of their lives when minutes seemed like hours.
