ing over the fences. Yes, it's true — we now have alpacas! Six of them, in fact, rescued by the MSPCA at Nevins Farm and originally from Martha's Vineyard, have trotted into Great Rock Farm (also known as Goats To Go) and straight into our hearts.

The moment they stepped off the trailer, I knew they were going to fit right in. One immediately stretched its long neck to nibble at a handful of treats, another hummed softly at the horses, and before long they were striking poses by the duck pond as though they'd always been here.

Newburyport's Vintage Car Show Block Party!

By Ava Moeckel, Reporter

NEWBURYPORT — Cruisin' the '50s returned to downtown Newburyport Thursday for its 13th year, drawing large crowds despite cool, breezy conditions with Hurricane Erin about 300 miles offshore.

From 4 to 7 pm downtown streets, including Market Square, State Street, Liberty Street, Pleasant Street, Unicorn Street and Inn Street Park, were closed to traffic and filled with more than 250 classic cars from the 1930s through the 1970s.

Car owners displayed their vehicles, many opening hoods for all to look at original engines, while the owners answered questions from the curious.

The free event also boosted local businesses, with shops and restaurants open and busy. Live music and a performance by the Pink Ladies from the Fox Run Dance Troupe, which turned the State and Pleasant Street intersection into a stage.

Cruisin' the '50s remains a community highlight, offering families and car enthusiasts the chance to celebrate vintage automobiles while enjoying Newburyport's downtown in a unique way. ♦

We'll print lots of photos next week!

Smart Glasses Help the Blind Read

By Stewart Lytle, Sr. Reporter

REGIONAL – When Steve Baran came to lunch recently to talk about the Lions Club Clipper City Rail Trail project for low vision people, he who has been blind from birth picked up the menu and started to select his choice.

Am I being scammed? this writer thought.

Baran wore dark glasses and relied on his wife, Denise, to help him find a seat. So, “how is he reading the menu?” I asked.

“I am wearing Ray-Ban Meta smart glasses,” he announced proudly.

One of several smart eyewear on the market, the Ray-Ban Meta AI was designed for gamers and sighted people who find enjoy the hands-free technology the glasses offer. Compared to using their phones, the glasses are faster and less cumbersome.

But for the blind, these glasses, powered by artificial intelligence, are life changing. Baran, who helps lead low vision groups at Amesbury and Newburyport senior centers, demonstrated the glasses for the Amesbury group this month.

The new glasses on a voice command can make calls, send texts and find answers.

“These are pretty amazing,” Baran told the Amesbury group. “Are they perfect? No. Do I like them? Yes. Do they make a difference? Yes.”

And the cost is around $300 a pair, although some smart glasses are priced much higher. And the Ray Bans come in a wide variety of styles from the classic Aviator to the Wayfarer and Skylar. They also come with clear lenses.

Another brand that is receiving excellent reviews is the Vital Smart

Glasses, which offers the same features as the Ray Bans, but it also will cameras record 1080p videos of up to translate in 134 languages. The Ray 60 seconds, which can be shared with Bans will translate in French, Italian and Spanish.

The glasses, which run on a charge of about four hours and can be Baran brought a Market Basket newspaper insert. He turned the glasses on from speakers in the arm behind the and said, “Hey, Meta,” he said. “Read this.” It is almost impossible for others to hear.

The glasses use an ultra-wide, 12-metapixel camera to register what smart glasses, Baran admits he is still is in front of it. It can produce both learning what the glasses can do and how to hold his head to allow the camera to read what is front of him. As a blind person, that has not been necessary.

In the growing smart glasses competition among manufacturers, Baran expects that more technology enhancements will be coming soon.

Asked what the glasses will not do, Barans said it will not let him cross the street without assistance. But it will read to him the words on a sign.

That brought us back to the interview I originally conducted over lunch.

In a project spearheaded by Baran, the Lions Club is installing beacons on mile posts along the rail trail in Newburyport. As reported in The Town Common two weeks ago, the beacons will talk with a free app on a cell phone and act as a guide on the trail, help walkers with directions and keep them informed of what they are about to encounter on the trail.

The Lions Club is testing the beacons now and expects to have it fully functional in the next few weeks. ♦

Michael Updike: Gravestones Don't Have to be Morbid

By Stewart Lytle, Sr. Reporter

NEWBURY – When one thinks of a gravestone carver, the conjured image is probably that of a humorless, gnarled man hunched over a large stone slate, his chisel and hammer tapping away to memorialize the birth and death dates of the deceased.

That is not Michael Updike, a robust, caring man, whose wit rivals his talent as a master sculptor and carver.

Updike has carved headstones for Pinocchio and Jimmy Cricket, Gumby and a frog, “who gave his life for science,” read his epitaph. Updike created a gravestone for a possum, to absolve his guilt of killing one as a child. He sold the possum memorial slate to a woman who also suffered guilt from a possum’s death.

On a long thin piece of slate, he carved a headstone for a grasshopper he once crushed with a rock. He placed a rock on top of the slate.

He is also the carver of the penguins that float near the shore of the Merrimack. He carved the penguins to humor his children, or more likely himself. But many a car driving on Water Street have pulled over to make sure they were not seeing an illusion.

Updike loves a variety of creatures for his gravestones: ravens and crows, all types of fish, Octopi and even mermaid skeletons floating on the sea bottom. He is particularly fond of goats, which often end up in his motifs, because to the sculptor, goats are a symbol of survival. They will eat really weird stuff to survive, he explained.

A visit to his studio at his home on the edge of the marsh is so enticing he should charge admission. His garage is filled with boxes of slates, some small and designed to hang on a wall, and others large enough to be outdoor art. His carvings, one-of-a-kind art works, which he sells on line and at artisan fairs, are of fish and squirrels, maybe a human skull or a skeleton.

Updike also carves the memorable and traditional.

The city of Newburyport commissioned him to produce a large, round stone to honor those who died and survived Covid. It stands today on the Merrimack River waterfront along the extension of the Clipper City Rail Trail.

Updike studied at the Massachusetts College of Art, majoring in sculpture. Later, he earned an MFA from the Vermont College of Fine Arts. Beginning in 1992, he began designing tabletop giftware and decorative art for Livia Cowan’s Mariposa, a gift and tableware company in Manchester.

He may be best known for his String of Pearls Collection, where multitudes of pearls provide luxurious borders around polished, silver pieces that were handcrafted from 100 percent recycled aluminum.

The death of a good friend, Heidi, and that of his father, John Updike, probably the most famous American novelist, led him to learn the craft of gravestone carving. “Cemeteries were America’s first sculptor gardens,” he said.

He studied the ancient craft from carvers and took a course in lettering in Rhode Island. He began experimenting with materials that included slates, marble and granite, but his favorite materials are slates that have been on rooftops.

He orders new stones from a company in Vermont that are delivered in a truck to his house/studio. But he gets most excited when he finds slates of different sizes and styles at yard sales. He prefers slates that have been battered and pitted by weather and ones that have a bit of tar that must be scraped off. “They are the most interesting,” he said.

His first intricate gravestone was for his father, which he erected on a family plot in Plowville, PA, where the elder Updike lived as a teenager. The writer’s ashes are interred there and in a cremation garden behind a church in Manchester.

The design of his father’s gravestone is traditional and whimsical at the same time. He said his father feared death so much that the younger Updike carved his face smiling as a winged skull, happily ascending to heaven.

Below the date lines are various signatures of names the elder Updike used at different periods of his life. On the back, Updike carved an early poem written by his father. It’s positioned above a giant crow coughing up telephone poles.

To show potential customers, Updike began 10 years ago to carve a series of his own gravestones. He confessed that he has never been brave enough to put an actual date for his own death. In one of his first, he carved a crow dragging his name and partial date of his death off into the sky. Over the years he has made nine different gravestones for himself.

Commissions began to come in. He now carves six or seven a year. “It is a long process,” he said.

Some are commissioned by the deceased’s heirs; others for themselves before their death. He meets with the clients to learn what they want on their gravestone. Those conversations run the gamut of emotions, he said. There can be jokes and laughter for some, tears for others.

He creates as many as six or seven different designs. By the fourth one, he said his imagination and humor kick in Michael Updike in his studio (Photo: Stewart Lytle) and the design gets a little strange and he knows the clients will reject it. But to his surprise, they often like those best.

The role of the gravestone carver is that of a psychoanalyst or pastor or a friend helping realize their vision, he said.

Updike has had some unusual requests. One was for a Beta fish. A woman had him carve a stone for her fish that was four inches long. In doing his research, he found that Beta fish are rarely longer than two inches, and they live about four years.

This fish died after only a year. “I think there was some guilt there,” Updike said.

Recently he was asked to carve a memorial for 40 horses, including a few ponies and a mule, named Smitty, which had died over the years on a West Newbury farm. He found a long, tan-nish-colored stone, on which he carved the names of the first grouping of horses and the mule. He added black paint to make the names pop.

The plan is to erect the three stones in the pastures where they once ran.

If you have an idea for your gravestone, Updike would love to hear it at mupdike222@comcast.net. For much more on the Michael Updike Carving Studio, visit www.michaelupdike.net. ♦

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A trusted colleague sheds light on a recent spate of puzzling workplace situations. This should give you the information you need to bring the matter to your superior’s attention.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) A shift in workplace management could be helpful for talented Leos and Leonas who have been waiting to have their accomplishments rewarded by receptive leadership.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A misunderstanding between you and someone you care for should be corrected immediately. This relationship is too important to lose over a bruised ego.

22) A welcome piece of good news helps clear the air in a family situation. A job-related incident also eases as more information provides a clearer focus on the problem.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Quick action to heal bruised feelings pays off in a big way. Now you’ll be able to move forward with your plans without a problem holding you back.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Your creativity combined with a positive attitude should give you a considerable edge in finding a way to get around the negativity you’ve run into.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A sudden streak of stubbornness could cause some problems. Try to be more open to helpful suggestions and more flexible in making needed changes.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Now that a special relationship appears to be well and truly restored, you can spend more time dealing with some long-needed workplace changes.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A new opportunity sounds promising, but watch out for any conditions that might be attached. Before making a decision, ask that each opportunity be explained in detail.

BORN THIS WEEK: You can often get distracted by promises of good times, yet you ultimately reach the amazing goals that you set out for yourself because of your determination.

Please Contribute to the Georgetown Troop #50 Boys Scouts with Your Returnable Bottles and Cans

I'm asking all you folks if you would be kind enough to donate all your recyclable, returnable bottles and cans for the Boy Scouts of Troop 50 in Georgetown.

The boys use this money to do their projects and go on trips during the winter and summer. They also donate scholarships! They could not do this without your support!

My name is Kay Lee Ogden, and I am willing to drive around and pick up your recyclables, and cash them in and give the money to the Scouts! My son is an assistant scout master, and works with the boys along with my grandson.

Please leave me your name and number, and I will be glad to call you and make arrangements. I can be reached at the following:

KAY LEE OGDEN: TEXT 978.771.6884 OR CALL: 978.352.8318 or you may send me a message at: KayLeeOgden4@gmail.com.

We appreciate your help with supporting these great kiddos who will make these good boys become better men. Thank you.

Reminder - School Clothes!

By Sarah Nicholson
Rowley Public Library Youth Services

ROWLEY – Back to school time is rapidly approaching, and there's nothing more costly than new clothes! Rowley Public Library and Striving for Sustainability have a solution for you; a free back to school clothing shop! From July 14th until August 29th you can drop off your gently used baby, children's and teen's clothing at the Rowley Public Library, 500 Wethersfield Street, or 41 Wethersfield Street. RESCUED ALPACAS

Unlike our goats and sheep, who keep busy clearing brush, these alpacas have no chores on their to-do list. Their only job is to simply be – charming, curious, and endlessly entertaining.

I often catch them gazing regally from the hilltop, peering into the pond as the ducks swim around, or engaging in staring contests with Penny, our ever-curious cat. Around here, they're already celebrities. I like to think of them as our "island stars" who traded beach grass for farm grass — and I dare say, they're enjoying every bite.

"The alpacas are a lively addition to the farm," said my nephew, Tre Aulson. "When I saw them pulling in, I ran right down to the trailer. I had no clue they were coming — my aunt had just adopted them the day before! They were such a friendly, cute surprise. I've already nicknamed the brown one Mocha."

From the very first moment they arrived, the alpacas seemed perfectly at home. And have already become a source of joy for family and visitors. Whether glimpsed from the car on the way to goat yoga or spotted during a mingle class, their gentle presence adds whimsy to daily life at Great Rock Farm. Among goats, sheep, "Dolly" the llama, horses, and the rest of our barnyard crew, the alpacas bring a new layer of delight — craning their necks in curiosity, humming soft greetings, and charming visitors with their quiet, social personalities.

And this is just the beginning of their story. Some of the alpacas arrived with minor health issues and are still learning how to be more social, but with time, patience, and plenty of love, we're excited to see how they'll blossom. As they settle into farm life, we have plans to include them in future farm events, where their calm, gentle nature will shine even brighter. We invite everyone to follow along as these "island stars" transform into beloved Georgetown residents.

This fall, the alpacas will be stepping into the spotlight at one of the farm's biggest traditions — the Goat's Fall Festival & Hayrides on Saturday, October 4, from 9–11 AM. They'll be waiting at the gate to greet guests as they park, adding plenty of fuzzy charm to the festive morning. Come for the hayrides, stay for the goats (and alpacas!) — and don't forget to meet the rest of the farm's animal crew. Tickets are available at goatstogo.farm/events. ♦
